Desperate to protect ships from German torpedo attacks, British lieutenant-commander Norman Wilkinson proposed what became known as dazzle. These stunning patterns and colors were meant to confuse the enemy about a ship's speed and direction. By the end of the war, more than four thousand ships had been painted with these mesmerizing designs.

The technique became known as "dazzle," and by war's end over 1,200 American and 3,000 British ships were designed and painted by a corps of workers, many of them women. "So just how well did dazzle work? Nobody really knows," Barton admits. There's no denying, however, that dazzle boosted morale and makes a heckuva great story.
